The Geoffroy family were winemakers already in the 1600s and have maintained the estate in the family ever since. In addition to Cumières, they also own vineyards in Damery, Hautvillers, and Dizy. They strive for the highest possible quality. They ferment the wine in oak barrels for several cuvées. The wines do not undergo malolactic fermentation giving them nerve and storage potential that most second Cumières champagnes lack. When talking with the well-educated young Jean-Baptiste Geoffroy, one understands what passionate wine lovers there are in this family. The winemaking becomes more and more ecological, and they live by the motto: "We do not own the earth, we only borrow it from our children." All the wines are recommended, and the grower is better than ever.
